HERITAGE

KJET, BORN SUMMER 1960

The world's first commercial Jet boating operation, KJet has its origins in a Christian youth trust set up to ensure the "spiritual, moral and physical wellbeing of the young people in Otago and Southland."

The early Jet boat industry was inextricably linked with the Lakeland Christian Camp in 1960 when camp trustees and Invercargill brothers Alan and Harold Melhop made the first powered navigation of the Kawarau Falls dam in a Hamilton Jet. Holidaymakers soon lined up for rides on the thrilling new boat, and at five shillings a go, the trip provided efficient fundraising for the Christian camp. So began one of Queenstown's most successful and enduring tourist operations.

The KJet service moved operations from the Frankton Jetty near the Frankton Campground to the Queenstown Main Town Pier at the urging of the then borough council, which was keen to benefit from the increasingly popular tourism operation. Soon after, the Shotover Extension was added providing a true safari from the Queenstown Main Town Pier, down the Kawarau and up the Shotover, through the canyons and under the Edith Cavell Bridge as far as the Oxenbridge Tunnel. The boats often grounded in the shallow braids of the lower Shotover River and in 1964 a separate Shotover Jet service was launched avoiding the challenging shallow waters. That trip started at the Edith Cavell Bridge and travelled down to Tucker Beach and back. Both the Kawarau and Shotover Jet services returned funds to the camp until 1966 by which time both services had been sold to pay off camp building mortgages. Two dormitories housing a total of 80 beds were paid for by the sale of the services.

KJet is still a Queenstown owned and operated business. Shaun and Sally Kelly now run the operation along with business partners Skeggs Group which all take pride in an enduring tradition of innovation.

HEALTH & SAFETY

Safety is of paramount importance to KJet. We aim to ensure that everyone enjoys their experience on the water and that we meet the very highest safety standards.

With 50 years of operation KJet has become known for innovation and the introduction of many safety features, some of which have become industry benchmarks:

1989 – Established first roll bar system, now standard equipment in commercial Jet boats.

1995 – Established innovative twin engine technology – now industry benchmark that virtually eliminates any chance of power or steering failure and is 100% more reliable than single engined boats.

2000 – Modernising refit of all boats including new features such as fuel injected motors giving increased reliability and efficiency, fully padded passenger cockpits and heated, shock absorbing suspension handrails.

The KJet fleet consists of eight boats, with a capacity of over 140 pax, all of which have been designed by KJet and built in Bluff by Mackraft Boats. The boats are specifically designed for maximum performance, safety and passenger comfort.
